In hopes of improving the ratings of yet another (third) version rendering of the “Frasier” TV sitcom, a cliffhanger episode for the season finale, which proved to be the series finale. In the cliffhanger, Daphne lands in an El Salvador prison – “What kind of stuuupid clerical error is this? Do I even LOOK like a short fat tattooed gang member with a mustache? Okay, now before you try to say anything about seeing a little mustache there, just let me warn you...”

This is where the Daphne character remains at the end of the series finale, which they had hoped would have been only the season finale. When asked about this, Kelsey Grammar, a staunch Trump-supporting Republican, responded, “Well, that’s how they tossed the dice, you wind up in an El Salvador prison forever, that’s the way it goes. The fans all know how much we love Daphne.” An attempt at a fourth rendering of the series developed into an important cause of fans of the series, hoping that they might at least rescue Daphne from El Salvador before the final end of the series, but when reached for comment Kelsey Grammar just laughed.
